Selected charts and tables from the Center for an Urban Future’s 2013 report The New Face of New York’s Seniors. The report found that New Yorkers are getting older and almost half of the city’s older adults are immigrants; but while the city has taken initial steps to plan for this rapidly diversifying population, not nearly enough attention has been paid to this particularly vulnerable subset of the city’s seniors.
RELATED PRESS

Advocates Say Agencies Should Better Serve City’s Large Number Of Foreign-Born Seniors

NY1, by Agnes Chung, July 29, 2013

New Report Reveals Large Senior Immigrant Population in the Big Apple

WFUV, by Ann Pierret, July 25, 2013

The Rising Number of Older Immigrants

WNYC Brian Lehrer Show, by Anna Sale, July 29, 2013

Older Immigrants in New York City

Communities & Banking, by Christian Gonzalez-Rivera, June 03, 2014

Dispute Grows Tense Over Community Garden in Queens

Wall Street Journal, by Derek Kravitz, August 01, 2013

A Group Portrait of New York’s ‘Oldest Old’

Community Center Aims to Address Needs of Shifting Demographics in Queens

Forest Hills Patch, by Nathan Duke, July 30, 2013

Aging in New York: City Wrestles with Poverty Among Seniors
Op-Ed: Taking Care of New York City’s Graying Immigrants

Queens boasts largest number of immigrant seniors in the city: study

For Many Boomer Immigrants, Rough Times Ahead

Video: Aging in NYC

City Agencies Prepare To Deal With Staten Island’s Aging Immigrant Population

Queens Borough President Melinda Katz got more money for seniors than her beep colleagues under a decades old arrangement

The MTA needs to get on the age train: How an aging subway system must evolve to serve New York City’s aging population

Report: Foreign Seniors Spike in Boro

Poverty Looms Large for City’s Aging Immigrant Population, Study Says

Advocates See ‘Broken’ Budget Process for City’s Seniors

Assembly budget includes critical funding to help aging New Yorkers

Center for an Urban Future