

Commentary/Op-Ed - May 2019

NYC parks need more money, here's how to raise it

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio and the City Council should commit to increasing the city's Department of Parks and Recreation budget by $100 million this year. But to make sure this investment is sustainable for the long-term, the city needs to get creative about alternative sources of revenue. In this City and State op-ed, CUF Editorial Director Eli Dvorkin lays out new ideas for generating funding for parks.

Eli Dvorkin

Record usage and decades of underinvestment in maintenance and infrastructure is threatening the long-term sustainability of the city's parks system. These parks, playgrounds, recreation centers and natural areas are crucial for keeping New Yorkers physically and mentally healthy, and play a key role in combating the effects of a warming planet. But as we documented in our 2018 "A New Leaf" report, revitalizing New York City's aging parks infrastructure will require substantial and sustained investment.

In this City and State op-ed, Center for an Urban Future Editorial Director Eli Dvorkin argues that the city needs innovative revenue-generating strategies to fill the gap between the park system's needs and currently available public funds. In addition to highlighting the important new citywide advocacy campaign Play Fair for Parks, which calls for a $100 million increase in the maintenance and operations budget for parks, Eli proposes a slew of new strategies to generate funding, including:

- Integrating more concessions into parks.
- Implementing a small surcharge on tickets to large-scale sporting and concert events held anywhere in New York City as well as to dockage fees at city-owned marinas, which would be directed to a newly created Parks and Recreation Infrastructure Fund.
- The systematic inclusion of parks funding from property developers as part of new zoning amendments.

Read the op-ed here.

Photo Credit: Trent Szmolnik/Unsplash

RELATED PRESS

Evidence of Growing Need for Capital in the City's Aging Parks

City Limits, by Harry DiPrinzio, October 22, 2019

Opinion: Mr. Mayor, it's Time to Play Fair for Parks

City Limits, by Lynn Kelly, May 22, 2019

City Council Holds Another Hearing on the Parks Capital Process

CityLand, by Jason Rogovich, December 09, 2019

NYC will finally fix Riverside Park's persistent flooding problems

Curbed, by Caroline Spivack, December 06, 2019

CENTER FOR AN URBAN FUTURE

120 Wall Street, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10005

cuf@nycfuture.org © All Rights Reserved.