

Commentary/Op-Ed - July 2017

Op-Ed: New York's Cultural Plan Should Tackle the Affordability Crisis

The de Blasio administration's CreateNYC plan is a promising step forward and follows months of dedicated outreach efforts to nearly 200,000 New Yorkers. However, as the city's arts communities face a deepening affordability crisis, the plan offers little by way of solutions to this existential threat. The mayor should act now to help put more artists and organizations on the path to sustainability

by Jonathan Bowles and Eli Dvorkin

After decades as the arts capital of the world, New York City finally has its first cultural plan. Released on July 19, the 180-page document, dubbed CreateNYC, is a promising step forward for the city's Department of Cultural Affairs (DCLA) and follows months of dedicated outreach efforts to nearly 200,000 New Yorkers. However, as the city's arts communities face a deepening affordability crisis the plan offers little by way of solutions to this existential threat. To its credit, CreateNYC makes clear that affordability is a critical issue for the health of the city's arts sector. But none of the plan's year one policy proposals tackle affordability head-on, making it the clear elephant in a room full of good intentions.

In this New York Daily News op-ed, CUF Executive Director Jonathan Bowles and Managing Editor Eli Dvorkin argue that as the city's small and mid-sized arts organizations are feeling the squeeze, the city should tackle the affordability crunch and put more artists and organizations on the path to sustainability by putting a slew of good ideas into action.

Read the op-ed here.

This op-ed is a continuation of research the Center for an Urban Future has done on the creative economy. Most recently, CUF has produced a series of commentaries and publications, including Artists in School: A Creative Solution to New York's Affordable Space Crunch, Time to Let New York Dance, A Small Boost in Arts Funding Would Go a Long Way, and Creative New York.

Photo credit: Ellie Pritts/Unsplash

General operating support for the Center for an Urban Future is provided by The Clark Foundation and the Bernard F. and Alva B. Gimbel Foundation. We are also grateful for support from Fisher Brothers for the Center for an Urban Future's Middle Class Jobs Project.

Center for an Urban Future (CUF) is an independent, nonprofit think tank that generates innovative policies to create jobs, reduce inequality, and help lower income New Yorkers climb into the middle class. For 20 years, CUF has published accessible, data-driven reports on ways to grow and diversify the economy and expand opportunity that are anchored in rigorous research, not preconceived notions about outcome. Our work has been a powerful catalyst for policy change in New York City and serves as an invaluable resource for government officials, community groups, nonprofit practitioners and business leaders as they advocate for and implement policies to address some of New York's biggest challenges and opportunities.

RELATED PRESS

The Deficiency of Bill de Blasio's Plan for Cultural Equity

Hyperallergic, September 19, 2019

CENTER FOR AN URBAN FUTURE
120 Wall Street, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10005

cuf@nycfuture.org © All Rights Reserved.